About Sharon Yavo Ayalon

Sharon Yavo Ayalon Ph.D. is an Architect, Postdoctoral Associate at The Urban Tech Hub, Cornell Tech, developing visualizations and simulations to achieve social impact in planning. Currently, she has been focusing on mapping NYC social distancing stories and the demographic changes resulting from privatization processes.. Her Ph.D. explored the linkage between urbanism and art and the manner in which local identity, spatial (in)justice, and social (ex-in)clusion are forged or deconstructed by artistic activity in cities. This research was awarded the President of Israel's Grant for Scientific Excellence and Innovation. With a background as an architect, she combines her research interest with creating art installations, performances, and curatorial practice. She received her Ph.D. from the faculty of Architecture and Town Planning at the Technion IIT, where she graduated summa cum laude BArch and MSc.
